Can you help us find some of Lundy's lost plants?

Many interesting plants have been recorded on Lundy in the last 100 years, but some have not been seen recently. They may just have been overlooked, or possibly have vanished altogether. If you can find any of the following species, please DO NOT PICK THEM but instead, make a note of the precise location, draw a sketch map if possible, and, even better, take a photograph. Details can then be entered in the logbook. For further information, or to record sightings, contact Andrew Cleave at andrew@bramleyfrith.co.uk

MISSING!

Moonwort Botrychium lunaria

A very small fern, usually about 10cm tall, which was last seen near Three-quarter Wall in the 1930s. It favours short turf, and is fully grown in June and July.

Lanceolate Spleenwort Asplenium obovatum

Recorded about 80 years ago, but no details were given about its location. It should be found on walls or sometimes in natural rock crevices. Beware confusion with Black Spleenwort which is quite common in places
